Remote Working_

In the midst of the coronavirus pandemic, many companies are implementing voluntary, or mandatory work-from-home policies. That means that lots of us are dealing with an unusual challenge: working from home for the first time, full time.

If you're used to travelling to work each day, the separation between work and home is physical, and it may help to try to replicate that as much as possible at home with a designated workspace at home. The workspace doesn't have to be a separate room, but it should feel separate from the rest of your home. Find a comfortable chair you are happy to sit in for eight hours a day, a dedicated desk makes the transition from home to work much easier and ensures that you are working at the right height, in the correct position and will feel comfortable, relaxed and in control. While the ready access to power and charging modules at the desk top makes working with modern technology so much easier.

Verco have been manufacturing furniture for over 100 years and are based in High Wycombe, in the heart of the Chiltern Hills. We understand how people work and what you need to make your working-from-home life less stressful and we have curated a range of furniture, seating, personal storage and screens that we think may help make your new workspace more comfortable and less damaging to your health. All products are supplied with our full five year guarantee covering manufacturing faults, so you can relax and concentrate on your own well being, and your work.

Working Remotely_

At Verco we are dedicated in making the transition of working remotely easier, more comfortable and more efficient.

Verco have been manufacturing furniture for over 100 years and are based in High Wycombe, in the heart of the Chiltern Hills. We understand how people work and what you need to make your working-from-home life less stressful and we have curated a range of furniture, seating, personal storage and screens that we think may help make your new workspace more comfortable and less damaging to your health.

When working from home it is important to make sure the boundaries between work and home aren't 'blurred' to ensure you're in full control during the time you dedicate to work. Studies show that keeping your places of work and relaxing areas i.e bedroom separate enables you to recreate your 'travel' to work which instinctively causes your brain to switch between the two. For some, not doing this can potentially blur the lines between work and rest therefore hindering their ability to relax and even disrupt sleeping.

Nowadays, our place of work, even if that is our home, is where we spend a good part of our time and it must be as comfortable as possible. Furniture and in particular chairs play a vital role in ensuring a pleasant ambience in your home.

Seating is significantly important, ergonomically, because of the physical contact that individuals have directly with seating and while the human body is designed specifically for activity, a seated posture is increasingly likely to be our main body position. And not just when we are at work either – this applies whether we are eating, sitting in the car or even in our leisure activities. Changes to the working environment, together with the rapidly advancing changes in technology are creating potential new risks to health.

The muscular activity, which is so essential for our health and well-being, is disappearing rapidly from our daily life. A lack of physical movement can be one of the causes of many illnesses. Experience tells us that if we remain active, we are likely to be more comfortable for longer. Taking frequent, and short breaks is good for health, while standing up for short intervals allows the body and mind to recover. For the ultimate experience why not take a look at our sit stand furniture that can make a real difference to your health and wellbeing.
